These are the things, my handsome friend,

That make life happier to the end:

Wealth, not as an employee
Amassed, but as a legatee,

A farm responsive to my care,
A fire to warm my pensive chair,
Law-suits never, rare the bane
Of dinner-suits, a mind that's sane,

A body sound, a shoulder free,
Not bowed by fear and slavery.

A disposition frank but kind,
Friends with me of a single mind,

Friends who easily are led
To share my table plainly spread,

Wine at night the cares of day
To smile at and to shoo away,

Fun and merriment in bed,
But such as proper to those wed,

A sleep that makes the night on wings

Depart and blessed daylight brings,

To be content with what we are,
And not to curse our natal star,

Never to fear the final day,
Never for death to hope and pray.
